An unexpected meeting between Vikings and an alien

Midgard

STEVEN DUPRÉ

Dupré has a semi-realist graphic technique, which fits the story he is illustrating marvellously.

RTBF

In the illustrated epic 'Midgard', Vikings encounter aliens in two parallel storylines. 'The Attack' is medieval. It starts off with a group of Vikings plundering part of the Flemish coast-line. One of them, Snorri, is unintentionally left behind after the retreat of his fellow-plunderers. To survive, he has to accept a partnership with a local boy who's also on the run.

On the flipside of the book, you simultaneously read a science-fiction story entitled 'The Flight'. A young extra-terrestrial delinquent, Oon, is banned from his planet, serving his time aboard a giant spacecraft. After his escape and a hellish pursuit, he accidentally ends up on planet earth. Face to face with mankind, he will have to adjust himself to survive in a strange and hostile world. In the middle of the book, at the intersection of the two story lines, Oon suddenly comes into contact with the Vikings...

Steven Dupré is a craftsman: his assured, very natural drawing style is of the highest quality. In addition, as a scriptwriter the author has mastered the art of taking his readers with him to a parallel universe, by means of subtle, profound stories.

Steven Dupré has given his unbridled imagination free rein.
