

Gripping visual drama

The Blind

MAARTEN DE SAEGER

A group of blind people takes a daytrip into the woods. They are led by Artuur, an older, sighted guide. During a rest break they talk to, but mainly past, each other. Then Artuur suddenly turns out to have vanished, leaving the group filled with dismay. Should they wait for him? What if he doesn't come back? They try to pass the time, but they edge closer and closer to panic.

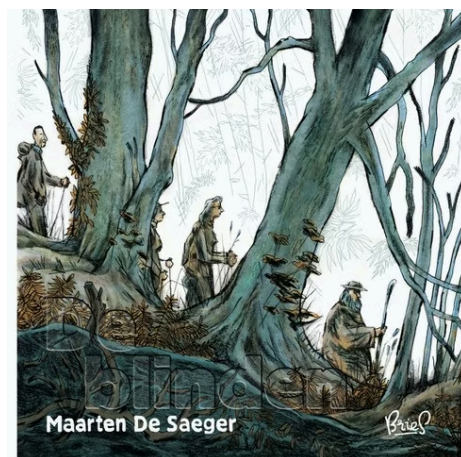

An allegory for human existence ****

KNACK

Based on a play by Belgium's only winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature, Maurice Maeterlinck, 'The Blind' is an intriguing drama that takes place at a single location. Maarten De Saeger makes the story entirely his own and portrays the nameless characters and their surroundings in many different drawing styles, which bring to life the emotions and anxieties of the group. The sparing use of colour has been carefully devised. De Saeger creates an extraordinary, haunting atmosphere, in which nothing is predictable and much is open to interpretation. His version of the story also has an open ending, as did the original play by Maeterlinck. 'The Blind' is an intense visual experience.

A staggeringly clever comic strip

AUTHOR

Maarten De Saeger (b. 1980) is not just a comic artist but also a freelance illustrator and colourist. Black humour and man's darker side are visible throughout his work, and many of his characters are unsympathetic, manipulative and untrustworthy. De Saeger's sober colour palette complements his topics remarkably well.
