

On the fragile balance between free market and government interference

The Limits of the Market

PAUL DE GRAUWE

Do the financial crisis and the growing inequality create a new balance of power between the free market and the government? Are we witnessing a turnover of capitalism and does the government take over again?

Nobody has taught me as much about the euro crisis as Paul De Grauwe

PAUL KRUGMAN

After a triumphal procession of decennia, capitalism is on the way of destroying itself. Climate change and growing inequality are key issues that illustrate the inevitable external and internal limits of the market. Only the government seems able to offer a solution. But the government also will collide with limits and in its turn will pave the way for a comeback of the market.

With his new book, 'The Limits of the Market', Flanders' most prominent economist Paul De Grauwe contributes to the debate on the tenability of our market system. De Grauwe sharply analyses the consequences of this disastrous oscillation that can only be stopped by taking drastic measures now.

AUTHOR

Paul De Grauwe (b. 1946) is an internationally renowned economist. He teaches at the London School of Economics and before was affiliated to the Catholic University of Louvain. He was a senator in Belgium and advisor to José Manuel Barroso. He writes columns on economics for newspapers in Flanders and for the Financial Times.

ORIGINAL TITLE De limieten van de markt. De slinger tussen overheid en kapitalisme (2014, Lannoo, 240 pp.)

TRANSLATION RIGHTS Liesbeth De Bruyne - liesbeth.debruyne@lannoo.be

TRANSLATION GRANTS Patrick Peeters - patrick@flandersliterature.be