

An insanely infernal novel

Marie

CHRISTOPHE VEKEMAN

For two years, Marie, 'the sweetest girl in the world', was the love and life of 'the doctor'. After her sudden death, he sinks into a state of mourning from which he is no longer able to escape. His bitterness comes out in his hate for the other villagers in Abraham. This town is teeming with odd characters, who each carry their own secrets. A supposed suicide combined with rumours sets a string of murders in motion. This spills over into manifold bloody revenge and, ultimately, in the style of Hamlet, the story has to end because all the characters are dead.

A Shakespearean drama with the allure of a Quentin Tarantino film

COBRA

'Marie' is a stylistically virtuoso and strikingly composed novel about love, death and the absurdity of life. Despite the undertone of bottomless grief, 'Marie' seduces the reader into gales of blissful laughter. Vekeman paints sharp contrasts: between love and death, between the isolated loner and village life, between the sophisticated style and the striking primitivism of the characters and between the absurd humour and the serious topics broached. The charm of this book lies in the impossible combination of contrasts, which, one way or another, are ultimately drawn together.

Vekeman gracefully navigates between horror and comedy.

DE MORGEN

AUTHOR

Christophe Vekeman (b. 1972) is a writer, poet and performer. Vekeman's universe is populated by rather unenviable characters who succeed in eliciting sympathy from the reader thanks to the author's humorous undertone. The elegance of his style and his keen eye for hilarious details keep his prose light, despite the difficult and sobering questions that he poses and the pessimism of his characters. Photo © Mieke De Ley

ORIGINAL TITLE Marie (2014, De Arbeiderspers, 192 pp.)

TRANSLATION RIGHTS Jolijn Spooren - j.spooren@singeluitgeverijen.nl

TRANSLATION GRANTS Marieke Roels - marieke@flandersliterature.be, Elise Vanoosthuyse - elise@flandersliterature.be, Yannick Geens - yannick@flandersliterature.be